Thanks to the development of modern technology, the idea of an electronic house is no longer ridiculous. It will be possible to have a house run electrically by computer technology in the near future. Lights can be turned on and off on a regular schedule. Old and sick people can be taken care of at home by computers. Many modern machines contain computer chips, allowing their users to program them. For example, a micro wave oven can be "instructed" to cook a certain dish. The housework will be done by the dishwasher, the washing machine and dryer and so on. Most entertainment equipment will operate with computer technology, too. Some examples are radios, TV, CD players, etc. The equipment can be set up to electronically go to certain channels or stations, or record specific programs at certain times. Indeed, cars can be started automatically so that on cold winter morning, people can get into a warm vehicle to drive to work. In short, computers will be widely used from operating the household equipment to entertaining people.
